Q: Magento product filter by number of links, and order direction I need help in an interesting situation. My customers are demanding that the category pages show a list of just those products which have at least one link. In that way, they can easily see what products they can link to, without having to click through all the products. I have managed this on the main category pages before, but it's proving to be a headache as I can't get my head around the logic to count the number of links, and to order them with the class as the last thing to be sorted. A simplified version of the category page displays: The customer clicks "All products" A list of all products is displayed, sorted by title To the left of the list, is a div with the class order-by-postdate and another div with the class order-by-came-date Each has a class of href which contains the number of links found (e.g. class="1") The next selection is to sort by number of links, in descending order, and then finally by last-came-date. As I said, this has proven to be a headache, and I don't really want to resort to rewriting the product list by hand. Is there a way to do this with some combination of the categories templates and blocks, some scripts or etc? A: Basically, on category page you can check if there are any category with the following code:

if(Mage::getSingleton('catalog/product_type_config')->getUsedProductCount(true) > 0 ){ }

This can be the method for check if there are more than one category product. You can call this method on category page code to show link products from only one category. I recommend you call this method in the block_catalog_category_view.
